1. About this policy

This policy explains the use of cookies on Evoxta's own website, Evoxta.com, and distinguishes this from websites we build, host or support for clients.

2. What are cookies?

Cookies are small files that websites store on your device. They can support website functions, remember preferences or track activity.

Similar technologies, such as tracking pixels and local storage, can also store or access information on your device.

3. Our website

Evoxta's own website does not use cookies or similar technologies to store or access information on your device.

As a result, we do not ask you to accept cookies when visiting our website.

Our website infrastructure may still process technical information, such as IP addresses and server logs, to deliver and protect the website. This is separate from cookies. Our Privacy Policy explains how we handle personal information.

4. Client websites

Websites we build, host or support for clients may use cookies or similar technologies. Their use depends on the features and third-party services included in each website.

Where included in our agreed services, we assess whether a client website requires a Cookie Policy and cookie consent controls. We provide an appropriate policy and guidance based on the website's actual use of these technologies.

A Cookie Policy alone does not replace consent controls where consent is legally required.

The client operating the website is responsible for approving its policy, ensuring it accurately reflects the website's use of cookies, and notifying us of changes that may affect it. Our responsibilities for implementation and ongoing maintenance depend on the services agreed with that client.

Visitors to a client website should refer to that website's own Cookie Policy and privacy information.
